It was around noon on January 10, 2013, when a horrible news circulated all over Iran: an Iranian university professor was assassinated in one of the streets of Tehran! Then, the detailed account of the news was released: "Mustafa Ahmadi Roshan, graduated in Chemistry Engineering from Sharif University of Technology (Iran's best University of Technology), the Commercial Deputy of Natanz nuclear site, and one of the most prominent individuals in Iran's nuclear industry, was martyred in a bombing attack carried out by a motorcyclist." This method of assassination was similar to the assassination of two other physics professors who had been martyred in the past three years. After those professors and Dariush Rezaeinezhad, who was assassinated with a gunshot, Ahmadi Roshan was the fourth martyr of science in Iran. He was assassinated by Israeli Mossad as the enemy does not want to see an Islamic country getting to the summit of advanced technology.

Islam's fourth caliph, Ali, can be considered one of the most revered figures in Islamic history. His nearly universal portrayal in Muslim literature as a pious authority obscures centuries of contestation and the eventual rehabilitation of his character. In this book, Nebil Husayn examines the enduring legacy of the nawasib, early Muslims who disliked Ali and his descendants. The nawasib participated in politics and scholarly discussions on religion at least until the ninth century. However, their virtual disappearance in Muslim societies has led many to ignore their existence and the subtle ways in which their views subsequently affected Islamic historiography and theology. By surveying medieval Muslim literature across multiple genres and traditions including the Sunni, Mu'tazili, and Ibadi, Husayn reconstructs the claims and arguments of the nawasib and illuminates the methods that Sunni scholars employed to gradually rehabilitate the image of Ali from a villainous character to a righteous one.
